Anniversary Marriage Days. Lord, living here are we, As fast united yet As when our hands and hearts by Thee

Together first were kuit. And in a thankful song Now sing we will Thy praise, For that Thou dost as well prolong Our loving as our days.

Together we have now Begun another year; But how much time Thou wilt allow Thou mak'st it not appear. We, therefore, do implore That live and love we may. Still so as if but one day more

Together we should stay. Let each of other's wealth Preserve a faithful care And of each other's joy and health, As it one soul we were.

Such conscience let us make, Each other not to grieve, As if we daily were to take Our everlasting leave.

The frowardness that springs From our corrupted kind, Or from those troublous outward things Which may distract the mind. Permit thou not, O Lord, Our constant love to shake; Or to disturb our true accord,

Or make our hearts to ache. But let these frailties prove Affection's exercise: And that discretion teach our love Which wins the noblest prize. So time, which wears away, And ruins all things else,

Shall fix our love on Thee for ave. On whom perfection dwells. -George Wither.

Mary. Of all the names that bards have praised In strains so soft and fairy. Or love has sighed, or tame has rung, The sweetest name is Mary.
